A Radar Plane Takes Up Watch Over Poland

NATO has sent a plane with a giant spinning radar to Poland, after three Russian missiles crashed on Polish ground.

Written and fact-checked by AI · News Pebbles

Poland is in central Europe, next to Ukraine. On 20 November, Poland's prosecutors say, three Russian cruise missiles crashed on Polish land. Poland belongs to NATO, a group of countries that protect one another.

Three days later, NATO answered. NATO's European commander, General Alexus Grynkewich, approved sending a special plane. It is called an AWACS, short for airborne early warning and control system, and it carries a spinning radar dome about 9 metres across.

Why put a radar on a plane? Radar on the ground can be blocked by the curve of the Earth and by hills. A radar flying high can see much farther.

NATO's fleet of these planes is based in Gelsenkirchen, a city in Germany.

A plane based in Germany now watches the sky over Poland.

WHY IT MATTERS

Radar planes help NATO countries see what is flying near their borders, and give them time to react.

India's Farms Grow a Record Pile of Grain

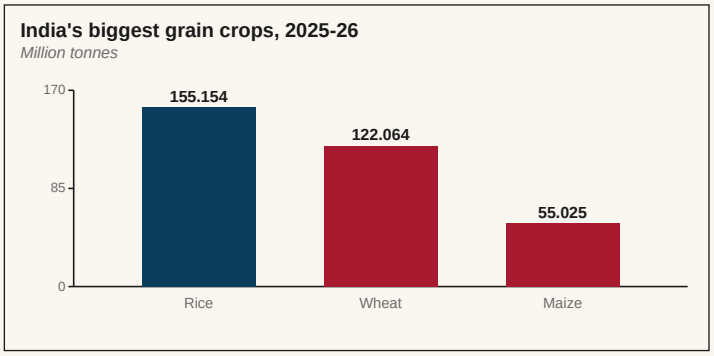
New government figures say India grew more grain in the year 2025-26 than ever before.

India's farmers grew 378.538 million tonnes of foodgrain in the year 2025-26. Foodgrain means crops like rice, wheat and maize that people and animals eat. The year before, it was 357.732 million tonnes.

Agriculture Minister Shivraj Singh Chouhan shared the figures in New Delhi on Thursday.

Rice led the way with 155.154 million tonnes, up from 150.184 million. Wheat came to 122.064 million tonnes. Maize jumped from 43.409 million tonnes to 55.025 million tonnes.

Rice sales abroad also grew by five per cent.



Rice was the biggest of the three crops.

WHY IT MATTERS

Grain feeds people at home, and what is left over can be sold to other countries.
